CONTENTS

Acknowledgments vii

Introduction. Analogy under a Different Form 1
Science, Literature, and History 7 / The New Historicism 12 / Thinking through Analogy 17 / Implications for Comparative Historicism 20 / Summary of Chapters 21

Prelude. Thinking through Analogy 27
Analogy vs. Comparison 30 / Harmonic vs. Formal Analogy 33 / Analogy and the “Swerve around the Literary” 39 / The Sign of Analogy 45

Chapter One. Erasmus Darwin, Enlightenment History, and the Crisis of Analogy 51
The Loves of the Plants and Sexual Taxonomy 57 / Stadial History and The Botanic Garden 62 / Flattening Allegory 68 / Zoonomia and Darwin’s Insurrection 73 / Conclusion: “Philosophical Arguments of the Last Generation” 80

Chapter Two. Crossing the Border with Walter Scott 83
The Subject of Enlightenment History 90 / The Forensic Antiquary 95 / Faking the Minstrelsy 103 / Linguistic Anthropology in Ivanhoe and Waverley 111 / Conclusion: “So Leyden were alive” 121

Chapter Three. Spooky Action in Alfred Tennyson’s In Memoriam A. H. H. 129
Analogical Verses 134 / Hallam’s Perfect Danæ 138 / The Logic of Analogy and the Plurality of Worlds 147 / Comparative Anatomy and the Archetype 157 / Conclusion: The Higher Type 162

Chapter Four. Falsifying George Eliot 166
The Westminster Review and the “Historic Imagination” 173 / “Higher Criticism” and the Natural History of Social Life 184 / Harmonic Sympathy in Middlemarch 189 / Form and the Entangled Word 198 / Conclusion: Against Origins 205
Chapter Five. The Origin of Charles Darwin’s Orchids 211

The Analogy Notebooks 218 / On the Origin of Species and the Curation of Analogy 221 / Darwin and the Novels 230 / Orchids in Action 237 / Flat Theology and Reading for Intent 245 / Conclusion: Epitaph for the Darwins 255

Coda. Climate Science and the “No-Analog Future” 258

Notes 261
Bibliography 297
Index 323